

- M: Hey Sahra, were you there at Europe Day? I didn't see you at all.
- S: Yes I was there. I saw you but I had no time to say hello.
- M: Why not?
- S: Because of my workshop. At first it was so interesting.
- M: Oh only at the beginning? Which one were you?
- S: In workshop two. Speaking for democracy and argumentation training.
- M: What did you do there?
- S: My workshop was about discrimination and generally what that means. At first we sat in a circle and introduced ourselves. Everyone told where they saw discrimination in their everyday life. Then came the roleplay...
- M: What role play?
- S: Everyone got a sticker on their forehead or shoulder. The person himself did not know what was written on it. We should meet the person as what was written on our sticker. For example a homeless man, a president, an old man or a woman with her child.
- M: Oh that sounds so funny.
- S: Yea but I found the rest a bit boring. We just talked about discrimination. But which workshop were you in?
- M: In workshop one about democracy.
- S: What did you do there?
- M: A lot of different things. We did much presentations.
- S: What kind of?
- M: At the most interesting one every group got a person who is socially committed. We got Raul Urauthausen. He fights for equal rights for disabled people.
- S: Oh yea I know him. Did you do something else?
- M: We just talked about our opinions to different topics. I would say that was fun to exchange.
- S: Sounds really interesting but now I have to go home.
- M: Yea me as well. Bye Sahra! See you tomorrow.
